

Private Robert Joseph Lahey (also found as Leahy) (Regimental Number 254) is interred in Knightsbridge Cemetery – Grave reference H. 2.

His occupation prior to enlistment being recorded as that of a miner earning fifty-five (or fifty) dollars a month with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company on Bell Island, Robert Joseph Lahey presented himself for medical examination there on August 26, 1914, only three weeks plus one day after the Declaration of War. It was a procedure which pronounced him...fit for Overseas Service.

During the next few days Robert Joseph Lahey made the short journey to St. John's, capital city of the Dominion of Newfoundland, where he was now to enlist at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury – engaged at the daily private soldier's rate of $1.10 (this included a ten-cent Field Allowance) - on September 2. He was a recruit of the First Draft.

Following a four-week wait – although training was to be ongoing – Private Lahey was to attest on October 1 and then, two days following, was to embark on October 3 with the others of the First Five Hundred onto the Bowring Brothers' vessel Florizel awaiting the contingent in St. John's Harbour.

The ship sailed on the morrow to its rendezvous off the south coast of the Island where she was to join the convoy transporting the 1st Canadian Division across the Atlantic.

(Right above: The image of Florizel at anchor in the harbour at St. John's is by courtesy of Admiralty House Museum.)

In the United Kingdom Private Lahey trained with the Newfoundland contingent: firstly in southern England; then in Scotland at Fort George – on the Moray Firth close to Inverness; at Edinburgh Castle – where it provided the first garrison from outside the British Isles; and later again at the tented Stobs Camp near the town of Hawick to the south-east of Edinburgh.

(Right above: Fort George, constructed in the latter half of the eighteenth century, still serves the British Army to this day. – photograph from 2011)

(Right above: The Newfoundland Regiment on parade at Stobs Camp and about to be presented with its Colours on June 10, 1915 – by courtesy of Reverend Wilson Tibbo and Mrs. Lillian Tibbo)

At the beginning of that August of 1915, the four senior Companies, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D', were then ordered south to undergo a final two weeks of training, as well as an inspection by the King, at Aldershot; meanwhile the two junior Companies, the later-arrived 'E' and 'F*', were sent to Scotland's west coast, to Ayr, where they were to provide the nucleus of the newly-forming 2nd (Reserve) Battalion.

(Right: George V, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India – photograph from Bain News Services via Wikipedia)

(continued)

*On July 10, 1915, 'F' Company had arrived at Stobs Camp from Newfoundland, its personnel raising the numbers of the unit to battalion establishment strength, and thus permitting it to be ordered to active service. The 1st Battalion, Newfoundland Regiment, comprising those four Companies, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D', was thereupon attached to the 88th Brigade of the 29th Division of the (British) Mediterranean Expeditionary Force.

It had then been during that period spent at Aldershot that Private Lahey of 'B' Company – he was not alone in doing so - had been prevailed upon, he on August 13, to re-enlist for the duration of the war*.

*At the outset of the War, perhaps because it was felt by the authorities that it would be a conflict of short duration, the recruits enlisted for only a single year. As the War progressed, however, this was obviously going to cause problems and the men were encouraged to re-enlist.

(Right above: Some of the men of 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D' Companies of the 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment at Aldershot in August of 1915 – from The Fighting Newfoundlander by Col. G.W.L. Nicholson, C.D.)

(Right: The image of Megantic, in peace-time a 'White Star Line' vessel, is from the Old Ship Picture Galleries web-site.)

On August 20, 1915, Private Lahey and his comrades-in-arms embarked in the Royal Navy Harbour of Devonport onto the requisitioned passenger-liner Megantic for passage to the Middle East and to the fighting against the Turks. There, a month later – having spent two weeks billeted in British barracks in the Egyptian capital, Cairo - on September 20, he and the 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment disembarked at Suvla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

(Right above: Kangaroo Beach, where the officers and men of the 1st Battalion, Newfoundland Regiment, landed on the night of September 19-20, 1915, is to be seen in the distance at the far end of Suvla Bay. The remains of a landing-craft are still clearly visible in the foreground on 'A' Beach. – photograph taken in 2011)

(Right above: Newfoundland troops on board a troop-ship anchored at Mudros: either Megantic on August 29, Ausonia on September 18, or Prince Abbas on September 19 – Whichever the case, they were yet to land on Gallipoli. – from Provincial Archives)

(continued)

(Preceding page: A century later, the area, little changed from those far-off days, of the Newfoundland positions at Suvla Bay, and where Private Lahey served during the fall of 1915 – photograph from 2011)

* * * * *

Wounded on November 27 or 28 of 1915, Private Lahey was admitted into the 54th Casualty Clearing Station at Suvla Bay having incurred gun-shot wounds (shrapnel?) to the mouth and lower jaw; he was also suffering from jaundice at the time*.

(Right: An un-identified Newfoundland soldier in the trenches at Suvla Bay – from Provincial Archives)

This was a particularly difficult time for not only Private Lahey, but for the troops of both sides: on November 26 a freak rain-, snow-, and ice storm had struck the ill-equipped area. The positions had thereupon been flooded to the point that there were to be fatalities from drowning – but not in the 1st Battalion. It had not been before several days – perhaps the above incident one of the first – that there was to be contact with the enemy.

(Right above: Turkish artillery pieces still stand watch in areas overlooking Suvla Bay. – photograph from 2011)

From Suvla Bay Private Lahey was transferred on November 30 to the 3rd Canadian Stationary Hospital at Mudros Bay, on the Greek island of Lemnos some fifty kilometres distant. Later again, on December 13, he was admitted into the Emergency Hospital, also on the island.

(Right above: Mudros Bay and its non-existent Harbour at the time of the Gallipoli Campaign: in 1915 and 1916 it was the principal port – except that there was no port – for all Allied shipping for the entire venture – from Illustration)

**No Canadian troops were to serve in the Gallipoli Campaign, the 3rd Stationary Hospital being perhaps the only Canadian presence in the eastern Mediterranean during this period. The hospital's matron and a nursing sister lie in Portianos Cemetery, victims of dysentery.*

(Right above: That part of Portianos Military Cemetery in which are to be found the graves of Nursing Sister M.F.E. Munro and Matron J.B. Jaggard of the 3rd Canadian Stationary Hospital. – photograph from 2011)

There appears to be no further documentation on him or on his condition until the report in his file that Private Lahey had re-joined the 1st Battalion, after convalescence, in Egypt on January 16 of the New Year, 1916.

* * * * *

Even before the time of Private Lahey's departure for medical care, the operation at Suvla Bay, and indeed the entire Gallipoli Campaign itself was proving to be a debacle: Flies, dust, disease, the frost-bite and the afore-mentioned floods – and the casualties inflicted by an enemy who was to fight a great deal better than the British High Command* had ever anticipated – were eventually to overwhelm the British-led forces and it would finally be decided to abandon not only Suvla Bay but the entire Gallipoli venture.

**Many of the commanders chosen were second-rate, had been brought out of retirement, and had little idea of how to fight – let alone of how to win. One of the generals at Suvla, apparently, had handed in his resignation during the Campaign and had just gone home.*

On the night of December 19-20, the British abandoned the area of Suvla Bay – the Newfoundlanders, the only non-British unit to serve there, to form a part of the rear-guard. Some of the Battalion personnel was evacuated to the nearby island of Imbros, some to Lemnos, further away, but in neither case was the respite to be of a long duration; the 1st Battalion was transferred only two days later to the area of Cape Helles, on the western tip of the Gallipoli Peninsula.

(Right above: Cape Helles as seen from the Turkish positions on the misnamed Achi Baba, positions which were never breached. The Newfoundland positions were to the right-hand side of the picture. – photograph from 2011)

The British and the Anzac forces – the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps also served at Gallipoli – were now only marking time until a complete withdrawal of the Peninsula was undertaken. The operation took place on the night of January 8-9, the Newfoundland Battalion providing some of the rear-guard for this second occasion as well*.

(Right above: 'W' Beach at Cape Helles as it was days before the final British evacuation – from Illustration)

**Lieutenant Owen Steele of St. John's, Newfoundland, is cited as having been the last soldier of the Mediterranean Expeditionary Force to step into the final small boat to sail from the Gallipoli Peninsula.*

(Right above: 'W' Beach almost a century after its abandonment by British forces and by the Newfoundlanders who were the last soldiers off the beach: vestiges of the wharves in the black-and-white picture are still to be seen. – photograph from 2011)

(Right below: The British destroy their supplies during the final evacuation of the Gallipoli Peninsula. The men of the 1st Battalion were among the last to leave on two occasions, at Suvla Bay and at Cape Helles. – photograph taken from the battleship Cornwallis from Illustration)

When the British evacuated the entire Gallipoli Peninsula in January of 1916, the Newfoundland Battalion was ordered shipped to Alexandria, arriving there on the 15th of that month. The Newfoundlanders were then immediately transferred southward to Suez, one of the ports at the southern end of the Canal which bears the same name, there to await further orders as, at the time, the subsequent destination of the 1st Battalion's 29th Division had not yet been decided*.

And it was, as reported above, in the Egyptian port-city of Alexandria, and almost certainly at the Large British Base Depot of Sidi Bishr established there, that Private Lahey reported back to duty. He was in time to travel south to Suez with his unit.

**Bulgaria had entered the conflict on the side of the Central Powers and Salonika was soon to become a theatre of war.*

* * * * *

After a two-month interim, on March 14, the Newfoundlanders embarked through Port Tewfiq, also at the southern end of the Suez Canal, for the French port of Marseilles, and disembarked there on March 22, en route to the Western Front.

(Right above: Port Tewfiq at the south end of the Suez Canal just prior to the Great War – from a vintage post-card)

(Right: British troops march through the port area of the French city of Marseilles. – from a vintage postcard)

Some three days after the unit's disembarkation on March 22, the Battalion's train arrived at the small provincial town of Pont-Rémy. It had been a cold, miserable journey, the blankets provided for them travelling unused in a separate wagon. De-training at the station at two in the morning the Newfoundlanders still had a long march ahead of them before they would reach their billets at Buigny l'Abbé.

(Right: A languid River Somme as seen from the bridge at Pont-Rémy – photograph from 2010)

It is doubtful that any of those tired soldiers paid much attention to the slow-moving stream flowing under the bridge that they passed on their way from the station. But some three months later the Somme would be a part of their history.

On April 13, the 1st Battalion entered into the village of Englebelmer – perhaps some fifty kilometres in all from Pont-Rémy – where it was billeted, received re-enforcements and, after two days' time, was introduced to the British lines of the Western Front to be immediately put to work to improve the condition of the nearby communication trenches.

(Right: A part of the re-constructed trench system to be found in the Newfoundland Memorial Park at Beaumont-Hamel – photograph from 2007(?))

Only days later again, two Companies – ‘A’ and ‘B’, that of Private Lahey – had taken over some support positions from a British unit* before the entire Newfoundland unit moved into forward positions on April 22.

**It should be said that the Newfoundland Battalion and two-hundred men of the Bermuda Rifles who were serving at the time in the 2nd Lincolnshire Regiment Battalion, were the only units at the Somme from outside the British Isles. This was also true on the day of the attack on July 1.*

For the remainder of the spring of 1916, the Newfoundlanders were to be preparing for the British campaign of that upcoming summer, the battles to be fought on the ground named for the innocuous, meandering river flowing through the region, and over which the parent unit of the 1st Battalion had marched only some few weeks previously at Pont-Rémy: the Somme.

If there is one name and date in Newfoundland history which is etched in the collective once-national memory, it is that of Beaumont-Hamel on July 1 of 1916; and if any numbers are remembered they are those of the eight-hundred who went over the top in the third wave of the attack on that morning, and of the sixty-eight unwounded present at muster some twenty-four hours later*.

**Perhaps ironically, the majority of the Battalion's casualties was sustained while advancing from the third line of British trenches to the first line from where the attack proper was to be made, and while struggling through British wire laid to protect the British positions from any German attack.*

(Right: Beaumont-Hamel is a commune, not a village (see below). – photographs from 2010 & 2015)

In fact, Beaumont-Hamel was a commune – it still exists today – at the time comprising two communities: Beaumont, a village on the German side of the lines, and Hamel which was behind those of the British. No-Man's-Land, on which the Newfoundland Memorial Park lies partially today, was on land that separated Beaumont from Hamel.

There are other numbers of course: the fifty-seven thousand British casualties incurred in four hours on that same morning of which nineteen-thousand were recorded as having been killed in action or died of wounds.

It would prove to be the biggest disaster ever in the annals of the British Army...and, perhaps worse, it was to continue for the next four and a half months.

The son of Richard Lahey, miner, and of Margaret Lahey (née Kavanagh) – to whom he had allotted a daily fifty cents from his pay - of Lance Cove Road, Bell Island, Conception Bay, he was also brother to James, Michael, Alice, Margaret (Mary Joseph?), Annie, William and Edward-J.

Private Lahey was reported as having been killed in action* at Beaumont-Hamel on July 1, 1916, while serving with 'B' Company during the fighting of the first day of the Somme. His burial on that same day was officiated by the Reverend H. S. Reid, attached to 87th Brigade.

At home, it was the Reverend Father J. J. McGrath who was requested to bear the news to his family.

(Right above: A grim, grainy image purporting to be Newfoundland dead awaiting burial after the action at Beaumont-Hamel – from ...)

Robert Joseph Lahey had enlisted at a declared twenty-six years of age: date of birth on Bell Island, Newfoundland, August 19, 1888 (Bell Island Roman Catholic Parish Records).

**His files also make note of Private Lahey having suffered gun-shot wounds on June 28: if so, they must have been slight as he apparently remained on duty.*

(Right above: Beaumont-Hamel - looking from the British lines down the hill to Y Ravine Cemetery which today stands atop part of the German front-line defences - The Danger Tree is to the right in the photograph. – photograph from 2009)

(The photograph of Private Lahey is from the Provincial Archives.)

Private Robert Joseph Lahey was entitled to the 1914-1915 Star, as well as to the British War Medal (centre) and the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal) (right).

The above dossier has been researched, compiled and produced by Alistair Rice. Please email any suggested amendments or content revisions if desired to criceadam@yahoo.ca. Last updated – February 11, 2023.