Dear Sirs-

With further reference to your letter of March 27th concerning the case of No. 1062, Fred M.O'Toole. I am afraid that it cannot be possible to settle his War Service Gratuity until it is known how much Post Discharge Pay and similar Allowance he has received from other Units with which he has served. If it is possible to have his form completed without his signature, we might perhaps be able to settle the War Service Gratuity. We have no knowledge of the amount of Post Discharge Pay allowed to American Forces and this is the chief difficulty in making settlement

Yours faithfully,

Your Excellency,
 I enclose a cutting which speaks for itself. Many of the disenchanted soldiers might keep what they knew until the war ends. This charge I understand was not in the driver of July 10. It would be no harm to let magazines & books know that the public is not anxious to see such reports in newspapers.

TWO YEARS OF WAR ENOUGH OF HORROR

Young Newfoundland Veteran, Visitor Here, Found Nothing but Frightfulness in Experience

ON TORPEDOED VESSEL

Soldiering in the Great War with Newfoundland regiments is a compendium of horrors that would stagger the imagination of a Dante. You lie in blood-soaked trenches for days with German shells bursting over you, and taking toll in the lives of your comrades. You are commanded by English officers who neither understand nor appreciate the character of their men. You toil for hours at a stretch with pick and shovel. Your clothes are caked with mud and sweat, and for days are never removed. Your body is crawling with vermin.

You are starving most of the time, and half-starved all the time. All day and all night, day after day, the big guns roar and the shells shriek. From ghastly No Man's Land the stench of the rotting corpses is stomach-turning. Deadly gases and sickening gas masks add to the horrors. At night you lie as part of a listening patrol among the dead bodies between the armies. Before daybreak you man the foremost trenches with your comrades, for the German rushes come at dawn. When it's your time to charge, the nervous tension before the word comes is frightful. When you charge you are simply insane. Sherman was right.

All of this is according to Fred O'Toole, 1733 S. 22d st., late corporal of the First Newfoundland Regiment, veteran of the Dardanelles campaign and the July Somme offensive. O'Toole's regiment was practically wiped out July 1 of this year, in an attack on a German advanced trench at Malley Malley, France.
Returning to Newfoundland in command of twenty-four time-expired soldiers, he was discharged at St. John's, and caught the Red Cross liner Stephano for New York.

The Stephano was one of the six vessels sent to the bottom last Sunday by the German U-boat that raided the New England coast. O'Toole witnessed her destruction from the deck of the United States torpedo boat destroyer that picked him up.

He is twenty-two years old, a graduate of St. Bonaventure's College of St.
John's, Newfoundland, and has acted as captain of a schooner in the Labrador fisheries. He has decided that his life has been sufficiently eventful and a quiet civil occupation will do for him now. "I ain't going back to the war. The war-ful veteran is a broad-shouldered, black-haired man, with piercing gray eyes. He looks older than his years, and his talk is staccato, self-confident, but not boastful.

GLAD TO SEE U. S. WARSHIPS

"I had been down to tea," he said, when asked about the sinking of the Stephano, and when I came on deck I saw a submarine lying about a hundred yards off and sending shells across our bow. There were two shots fired by the time our engines were reversed. All around us were warships. I thought at the time that it was some kind of a drill, and even when they commenced lowering away the boats I didn't realize that a German submarine could be attacking us on this side of the Atlantic. When I did I was glad to learn that the other warships were part of the United States navy.
The submarine was flying no flag when she shot across our bows.

"The sea was smooth, and all of us passengers reached the rescuing ships without mishap, but none of us saved our belongings. I had changed my suit during the afternoon and had most of my money in the suit I took off. I forgot this during the excitement of making good, although I was among the last to leave the ship, and I reached New York with a single red coat. Luckily, I had means to replenish my pocketbook when I got there." After we left the Stephano the submarine commenced firing into her, but the shells she used—I judge they were four-inch torpedoes—had no effect at all. Then they torpedoed her and she sank immediately.

"I enlisted at St. John's, which has been my home from childhood, in 1914. I was in the 15th Newfoundland Battalion, with my regiment sent from the island to Arr. where I received the conventional of military police.

VETERAN OF THE GREAT WAR

Fred O'Toole, 1733 S. 22d st., was a passenger on the steamship Stephano, sunk last Sunday off the New England coast by the German submarine U-33. He has been discharged from the British army after serving since the outbreak of the war in a Newfoundland regiment.

Then we went to the Dardanelles. I didn't get much chance to get acquainted with the Turks, for I was stricken with dysentery and spent several weeks in the hospital. From there we went to Alexandria, Egypt, and there I was corporal of police, besides being cashier of the regimental cinema show. Then we embarked from Port Said for France and zigzagged through submarine infested waters to Marseilles. Every man had to wear a life preserver all the way and to remain below decks. The penalty for violation of this order was Field Punishment No.
1. Fancy tying a man to a stake for four hours a day for the violation of an order?
That was F. P. 1.

DIDN'T LIKE OFFICERS.

"F. P. 1 is an example of why the Newfoundlanders don't like the service. You see, we are not Colonials, like the Canadians and Australians. They were commanded by their own officers. We were commanded by English officers, who undoubtedly understood the type of men enlisted in England, but who did not understand the outdoor men who enlisted at St. John's. That the Newfoundlanders were efficient is indicated by the use they made of us. If they wanted a trench dug, a bridge built, a gun rescued from the mud, anything, they called on our men. The English, clerks and indoor men, were practically useless when it came to initiative. They simply weren't used to such work.

"We spent but a short time back of the front, and I'll never forget our introduction to the battle lines. We had an English guide. He lost the way for us, and as a result we tramped for miles in a sap, a sunken path leading to the advanced trenches. It was raining, and most of the time we were knee deep in mud, stumbling in the dark except when the star shells lit up the sky.

"I took part in bomb raids on the German lines, and had charge of sappers who mined villages held by the enemy, and took my turn as listening patrol between the lines. It sounds exciting, but it was all so ghastly and gloomy and dirty.

"Bayonet fighting? No one can describe it. You are insane. You see gray figures with spiked helmets and you dash at them, I suppose, and try to kill them, and they try to kill you. You are frenzied and you stab and stab. Something hits you—and you wake up in a hospital. What was it like? You don't know.
I don't know.

"The charge on July 1 at Malley Malley was my last engagement, and I'll be satisfied if I am never in one again.
The night before the battle we were told that we would attack in the morning.
We were eight miles behind the first line then. We loaded our equipment—about 150 pounds—on our backs and shoulders and marched to the first line early in the morning. We 'non-coms.' were given permission to sight through the periscopes and study the 250 yards of No Man's Land we had to cross under fire.
It was a stretch some hundreds of yards in length and about 250 yards across.
Our artillery had been shelling that trench across the way for over a week, and a torrent of shells was being dropped upon it then. At 3 o'clock our lieutenant-colonel took his 'coms.' with us.
He drew his watch from his pocket and announced: 'One hour.' The word went down the line.

SUSPENSE BEFORE THE CHARGE.

"At half-past 3 he announced: 'A half-hour.'

"Later he said: 'Ten minutes,' then, 'five minutes,' 'two minutes.' It seemed an age. The men were trembling, sweat-pale-faced, excited. At last the word came.

"We were on the parapet with a rush, some of them as they presented the barrier wall, but most of the command reached the centre of No Man's Land, when an almost unbelievable storm of machine gun fire burst upon them. A few, but very few, reached the scattered barbed wire entanglements. Almost all the rest fell before that awful fire. Eight hundred and two men answered the lieutenant-colonel's command to charge.

Fifty-six of us returned to our trenches under command of a sub-lieutenant.

"That was my experience in the July Somme offensive. I had enlisted eight-teen months before for the period of one year. I applied for my discharge and was placed in charge of a squad of returning soldiers, and mustered out at St. John's."

O'Toole declares that the German bravery has been exaggerated in some cases. "Some of them are very brave," he said, "and some are the worst cowards I ever saw. As far as the war is concerned, I think they're beaten right now, but they are stubborn fighters and it will take some time to convince them."
